Bishop Cannon's Deals On Market To Be Examined

Surrenders Gavel to Bishop Beauchamp at Dallas Convention

MAKES STATEMENT

Caraway Says the Senate Committee Should Know "Whole Story"

NEW YORK, May 16.—(AP)—T. H. Caraway, chairman of the senate lobby committee, today requested Charles H. Tuttle, federal district attorney, to permit an agent of his committee to examine the records concerning transactions of Bishop James Cannon, Jr. with the New York brokerage of Charles Goldthrust, and Cable & company.

Mr. Tuttle said he and the department of justice were willing to have the records examined. Goldthrust was the leading defendant in two indictments brought against Cable, & company and upon his plea of guilty to a mail fraud charge, was sentenced to serve five years in a federal prison. Evidence showed that he was a friend of Cannon's and that the Bishop carried a margin account.

DALLAS, May 16.—(AP)—Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Washington, D. C., today's president of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, surrendered the gavel to Bishop W. J. Beauchamp, of Atlanta, Ga., "because of certain matters before the conference."

He asked Bishop Beauchamp to take the chair after making two statements concerning the work of the Board of Temperance and Social Welfare. One of these he said was unpertinent "because of a statement made by Dwight W. Morrow saying that he was not in favor of the return of saloons, but for the repeal of the 18th amendment."

Another condition Cannon referred to was charges pending against him for gambling on the New York stock market. On the eve of his expected trial Bishop Cannon last night took issue with Morrow on the latter's proposal for repeal of the 18th amendment.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP)—Chairman Caraway of the senate lobby committee said he planned to send a committee investigator to New York to assist in the investigation of transactions that Bishop James Cannon, Jr. had with New York brokerage houses.

Caraway said the senate committee would investigate Cannon's financial transactions and ought to know the "whole story and see the whole record."

IMBODEN, Ark., May 6.—(AP)—Spence Dodson, 30-year-old farmer's wife living ten miles east of here, was shot in the back and severely wounded at her home near here today. Rufus Persfield, blamed by the woman for the shooting, could find no motive for the act.

In a statement, the woman said she was looking for some turkeys this morning at a spot about mid-way between her home and Persfield's when suddenly she looked up and saw Persfield pointing a gun at her.

She told officers that she was shot in attempting to flee. Persfield had not been arrested at noon, having fled the scene following the shooting.

Guard Draft Measure Is Opposed In House

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP)—Opposition to the Speaks bill, which would enable the president to order the National Guard to service with the regular army in any part of the world was expressed in the House Military Affairs Committee by Representative Quinn, Democrat, Mississippi.

The Mississippiian, a member of the committee, said the measure would give the central government the right to "pick up the boys by the nape of the neck and throw them across the ocean" and that it would take away their function as state troops. The effect of the bill, he said, was to make the National Guard a part of the regular army.

Representative Speaks, republican, Ohio, who introduced the bill, also a member of the committee, said the measure would obviate the necessity of a draft in emergencies.

High School Boy Succumbs to Hurts

Don Jones, Hurt in Windstorm at Naples, Dies in Hospital

TEXARKANA, May 16.—A valiant 12-day battle against death was ended in Michael Meagher hospital at 6 p. m. Thursday when Don Jones, 17-year-old Fouke high school student, succumbed to injuries received in a windstorm near Naples, May 3.

Two operations and as many blood transfusions were useless after 12 days in which surgeons attempted to keep the flicker of life in the youth's body glowing.

Dr. C. M. Junell, Fouke physician, who was with Jones when a large limb was blown from a tree in the woods in which they were squirrel hunting and hurled against the body of the youth, submitted the blood for the two transfusions.

The blow from the large limb broke Jones' spine and punctured his kidney. Although the spine was broken clear of a vertebrae, the punctured kidney hindered the youth's progress from the outset, physicians said.

Throughout the 12 days in which Jones was confined in the hospital, attendants expressed hope daily that he would recover. His unusual stamina was attributed to the prolonged defeat in his fight against death.

The youth was brought to Texarkana from Naples the day after the accident, having been kept in a physician's office there through the night. He was believed dying upon arrival here, but a rally resulted in a faint hope for his life by physicians.

According to Dr. Junell, who related the story of the accident after arriving here, he and the youth were trapped in a dense forest when the windstorm struck the vicinity. They were racing for a clearing when the fatal limb was blown against Jones.

Naval Officers Attack Treaty

Says Agreement Did Not Represent Parity With Great Britain

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP)—The cruiser provisions of the London naval treaty were bombarded by two high officials of the navy today for the American negotiators accepting three lesser 8-inch gun ships than the naval general board set for national defense.

Rear Admiral Mark L. Bristol, chairman of the board, told the senate foreign relation committee Rear Adm. Adon naval treaty did not "represent parity with Great Britain nor a proper cruiser ratio with Japan and the best thought of navies were brushed aside at London."

Appearing before the naval and foreign relation committees Rear Admiral Hillary P. Jones said a vital and fundamental concession was made when the American delegates took eighteen 8-inch guns in place of 21, reluctantly agreed to by the general board last September.

NEW ORLEANS, May 16.—(AP)—Frowning upon the straw ballot, and calling for mobilization of all patriotic citizens to oppose any rebellion against the National prohibition law, the committee on social service of the Southern Baptist convention today urged the church to seek defeat of any candidate for a political office from the president down who does not openly and frankly support the prohibition law.

Hope C. of C. Will Sponsor It With Help of Growers

Annual Event Gets Unanimous Endorsement of Farmer Groups

SUPPER IS SUCCESS

Melon Growers to Convey County for Festival Supply

The Fifth Annual Watermelon Festival was assured this city at a dinner meeting of Hope Chamber of Commerce and Hempstead county watermelon producers last night at Hotel Barlow.

Called for the purpose of finding out what the melon producers think about the Festival the supper was quickly turned into a testimonial meeting, in which the growers played a leading part. They voted to cooperate with the city committee in securing melons for the big day of offering to follow any one of several plans which will reduce the cost to the executive committee.

Woodward Wiggins, Hope, Ark., suggested that every melon grower donate to the Festival committee 250 pounds for each acre of melons planted. Ralph Rountree, president of the Chamber of Commerce, who presided, thanked Mr. Wiggins for his offer, and said that possibly the growers would be willing to accept a plan offer of 50 per cent of the prevailing market price for all melons distributed free to the Festival grounds.

Melons Are Arranged
Another melon grower, George Wiggins, said either proposal would be acceptable to the producers. He developed from other speakers that 10 per cent of the melons distributed at last year's Festival were bought on the open market, at "exceptionally high prices" although the prime object of the Festival is to stimulate the melon market outside of this territory, for the benefit of the farmers.

The growth of the watermelon business in Hempstead county, since the establishment of the annual Festival furnished a thrilling story for last night's meeting. Chamber of Commerce records show that shipments from this county have increased from less than 150 cars a year to more than 500 cars, and Hempstead has become the most famous watermelon county in the world.

Clyde Monts, local shipper, told the meeting that the Festival advertising had produced tangible results for growers and shippers. We hit the market about the same time Missouri

Lee Cazort Withdraws

THE voluntary retirement of Lieutenant-Governor Lee Cazort from the gubernatorial campaign, as announced Wednesday, stamps him as a man of high political courage.

This newspaper has an excellent regard for Mr. Cazort. It disagreed with him on his policy of making the state highway program the major issue of the campaign, an opinion which was reflected quite generally among other Arkansas newspapers. But the lieutenant-governor is a man of courage and a man of action, and subsequent developments in the state campaign give his farewell statement a pleasing note of frankness. He says:

"When I entered the race for governor I had hoped that I could engage single-handed against this administration."

I knew when I announced for the office of governor that if the administration were successful it must be through the splitting up of the votes of their opposition. I think there are few people today who believe that under the present conditions it would be possible for the people to say who is their choice for governor. I think the time has arrived for personal ambition to give way to patriotism and I intend to lead the way."

Mr. Cazort has made an accurate statement of the political condition of Arkansas, which until his retirement had been candidates for governor, and still has five.

You do not appreciate how much Mr. Cazort has done in behalf of a fair election until you recall that Arkansas has no preferential primary law, and that the average Democratic primary is a confusing huddle of mud-slingers.

The most satisfying election in recent years was the two-man contest waged by Tom J. Terral and Judge Martineau in 1926. There was plenty of mud in that campaign also, but any contest gains a certain dignity and force when it presents two opposing leaders, and sharply divided political philosophies, for the voter's choice.

Mr. Cazort has hit the nail on the head when he says that up to the moment of his retirement "there were few people able to say who is their choice for governor."

His endorsement of Brooks Hays is the most important development of the campaign. It whittles the field down to three candidates of an significance, Governor Parnell, scattering attack upon the State Highway Commission, in Mr. Hays, and Judge Sheffield—and except for his East Arkansas following Judge Sheffield can not be said to have figured thus far in the larger arena of state politics.

It is worth while to note that the retirement of Mr. Cazort not only consolidates the field of candidates but also condenses the campaign issues. Heretofore there has been a scattering attack upon the State Highway Commission, in which Mr. Cazort was a leader. But Judge Sheffield and Mr. Hays are making their major issue the administration's record in the legislature.

It becomes increasingly evident that the administration, instead of making political capital out of the highway program will be called upon to defend itself at its weakest point—the legislature.

This is a "break" for the voter. There hasn't been a really new development in highway legislation since the Martineau law was enacted more than three years ago. Obviously the rest of the state machinery hasn't stood still in the meantime. The actions of the 1929 legislature were swayed by lobbyists and accused at every turn with charges of corruption. The state income tax was sponsored by the administration on the ground that the schools had to have the money, yet the legislature had hardly adjourned before the schools were crying that while the income tax was coming in the front door a quarter of a million dollars had been taken out the back door and given to another department. This is the sort of thing that makes taxpayers feel outraged and voters uneasy.

About Population

OFFICIALLY Stuttgart's population will go into the census report as 4,906, but actually the number of people who call Stuttgart their home aggregate more than 5,000—possibly 5,200.

But Stuttgart has no cause for complaint at the showing made in the recent census returns. Ten years ago the town was filled with temporary residents, attracted here by the unusual prosperity created by $3.00 rice. In the years that have intervened hundreds have left town but Stuttgart has maintained a steady growth nevertheless with thousands of dollars invested annually in new homes and business houses and other improvements.

But what does a few hundred people, more or less, mean anyway. In the words of Will Rogers, "folks make towns, not numbers."

And there's not a better town than Stuttgart in Arkansas.—Stuttgart Arkansawyer.

Can He Do a "William Tell"?

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of several stories reporting some of the most interesting and significant things heard at the annual U. S. Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington. These are especially timely because of the current interest in the business situation.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Business received more attention from American business men at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States here than it ever received before. If that's possible, the chamber made "What's Ahead for Business?" its program, voicing a question interesting the entire country at this time and most poignantly the business men themselves.

Besides inspiring the usual predictions about how good things are going to be and the customary complaints about taxes and "governmental interference," the meeting produced many serious and significant discussions and addresses which indicated that the members were alive to current problems of all descriptions and that they didn't intend to permit the current depression to resolve itself into any period of stagnation or to allow its lessons to go unlearned.

Urges Unemployment Study
One of the most impressive messages given to the chamber was brought by John H. Fahey, the Massachusetts publisher, a former president of the U. S. chamber. Fahey raised and discussed many questions of importance which he said were now being pressed from many directions for re-examination following "the unfortunate developments of last year."

The problem of unemployment, he said, could not be ignored, if only because of its incalculable adverse effects upon industry. Following the study of the Hoover commission on unemployment, business men, except in individual cases, did nothing effective to follow up the results. Some persons, Fahey said, regarded unemployment as an unpreventable evil about which little could be done. But progressive industrial leaders in many lines had really stabilized production and employment.

"Shall we passively await the establishment of a dole system?" they demanded. "Important as other questions are, there is none which we should attack with more persistence and determination. If business men as a whole are unable to contribute constructively toward a solution, then we may be sure that others with less practical experience will sooner or later apply remedies far from useful in their ultimate effects."

Taking up "profitless prosperity," Fahey cited figures showing that in the 1926 tax returns 57 per cent of corporations had shown a profit and 43 per cent had losses of $2,168,000,000. Less than one per cent of corporations filing returns made 62 per cent of the profits. The situation was about the same in 1927. The question is increasingly raised, Fahey said, whether this is a promising and sound condition.

Other significant things the chamber heard from Fahey: The question of devising better means for curbing speculation is arising more sharply than it has for many years.

Restlessness over mergers and combinations, with their capitalization and possible final good or bad effects, exists among average citizens as well as hundreds of thousands of business men and bankers.

It seems inevitable that government will concern itself finally in some degree with problems presented by investment trusts, branch banking and concentration of control over credit. Should not business men interest themselves in sound thinking toward establishment of just, reasonable and constructive regulation?

Dear Folks:
So Hope is to have an-other watermelon festival again. Well, that's good news for me. I can sure make good use of another one day vacation.

The only trouble with the famous melons raised around here is that they're to big for me to carry out of the patch by myself.

The boss says we will remove watermelon stains from delicate fabrics next Summer just like we re-move all manner of spots and stains now—so you can't tell the garment had ever been soiled.

Modern, scientific ma-chinery and methods does that. I'm a part of that "modern methods" around this cleaning shop.

"Officer Bob" Is Canine Cop in City of St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, May 15.—"Officer Bob" of the St. Louis police department wears brass buttons on his collar, is the sleuth of his kind in the city, pa-trols a beat 24 hours a day and never went to rookie school.

Bein four footed instead of two like most coppers, and with a barking voice that beats a traffic cop's, "Of-ficer Bob" has been able to rise fast in the department and there is some talk of making him sergeant.

The nondescript dog, part bull and part terrier has six arrests on record so far this year.

All day long and often through the night, the dog follows Patrolmen Thomas Walsh or eGorge Checkett round their downtown beats. A man with a bundle who acts suspiciously when Bob barks—for the dog al-ways barks at anyone with a bundle—is certain of arrest.

SHAWLEY COVELESKIE was a pitcher and a cool head. Peter Jablonowski is pitcher for the Indians, one of the best in the league. Peter is a Pole, too, but not a cool head. Peter is a piano player with a leaning toward chess.

OFF-Hand Tip
FLYING HEELS, Sarzen II and Dedicate have been withdrawn from the Kentucky Derby. These three, especially Flying Heels, were expected to be contenders. That leaves the field with hardly an outstanding popular choice, unless it is Gallant Fox, with Earl Sande up.

The year 1925 was regarded as the "year" in the Derby, too, with no great outstanding candidates. Offord Cochran's Corvair was selected then over in speculation in the Prentiss and was very well liked, but aside from that, there were no over-whelming popular choices such as Whiskery Over, Whiskery and Mad Count were.

Not Much Hoss
EARL SANDE went to Louisville that year without a horse to ride. He happened to meet the owner of Flying Ebony the night before the race, and was given the horse. Flying Ebony was a field horse.

They figured Flying Ebony as a "hoss." He wasn't heard of much after that Derby. The jockey who rode him is heard from again this year. Flying Ebony will be in the Derby. It's an interesting story, according to the Chicago Chronicle, ought to be read.

A Fascinating Study

ONE of the most interesting of the hour occupations is the tracing of thoroughbred blood lines. A horse wins an important race and you look him up. Invariably, back in his family tree is the mark of greatness that explains his gallant effort.

Clyde Van Dusen, winner of last year's Derby, seemed a colorless bit of horseflesh. There was no flash in his appearance. His record was not brilliant. Yet Clyde was a son of Man o' War and Man o' War was the son of Fair Play, one of the greatest sires that ever lived. Fair Play was the daddy, too, of Display, Chance Shot, My Play, Mad Hatter, Chance Play, Fairmount, Messenger, Playfellow, Sporting Blood and Chatterton.

In this year's Derby are five sons of Man o' War, several of the progeny of Chatterton, Mad Hatter and My Play, and one son of old Fair Play himself, Perfect Peach, whose mother was Perfect Peach. "If Fair Play were alive today and could go and see the Derby, he might exclaim: 'Well, well, isn't this quite a family reunion, though!'"

An old but sturdy Irishman, who had made a reputation as a gang boss, secured a job with a railroad construction company in Port au Prince, Haiti. One day, when the sun was hotter than usual, his gang began to shrink. As the chief engineer rode up on his horse he heard the Irishman shout: "Allez! you cons of guns, allez!" Then turning to the engineer he said, "I curse the day I ever learned their language."—Boston Transcript.

Hall Winner By Knockout Route

Floors "Panama Kidd" in Seventh Round, Other Fights Good

The Portorican hurricane in the form of one "Panama Kidd" appeared in the ring at North Main Street arena last night and unleashed all his fury upon Johnny Hall, the Little Rock flash, in a schedule 10-round bout. The fighters were pretty evenly matched and the "Panama Kidd" gave Hall one of the hardest battles in all his appearances at the Skating Rink ring here. The fight furnished the fans a plenty of thrills and action until the fatal seventh round of the mill when Hall, the Little Rock whirlwind, handed the "Kidd" one of his famous wallops, sending him the K. O. route. It was "Good Night" and the birdies for the "Kidd."

In the "prelims" Preacher Walker, a favorite among Hope fight fans, and Eddie Davis, both of Hope, "tucked" their heads and let fly right and left in a three-round bout, the "Preacher Demon" being declared the winner after giving Davis a beating.

Willie Glenn of Hope, and John Dempson, of Prescott, gave a demonstration of their prowess as fistic "artists" in a schedule three-round bout, furnishing plenty of action. Johnnie went the K. O. route as the result of a fone of Willie's hard wallops.

Notwithstanding the hard down-pour of rain a good crowd "stormed the weather" to see the fight, and were amply repaid for the trip.

There was not a very large crowd at Sunday school Sunday morning on account of the wreck, but we are hoping to have a large crowd next Sunday.

TIME FOR AN ALIBI

The justice of the peace in a town in Ohio, in pursuance of his duties, had to hear and judge cases that were brought before him, and also perform occasional marriage ceremonies. He found it difficult to dissociate the various functions of his office. Even, thing had gone smoothly until he had asked one bride: "Do you take this man to be your husband?" The bride nodded emphatically. "And you, what the justice, turning to the bridegroom, "what have you to say in your own defense?"—Chicago News.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

NATALIE'S CONSCIENCE was a heavy burden. She had been married for two years, but she had never found the happiness she had dreamed of. Her husband, ALAN, was a kind man, but he was not the man she needed. She was a woman of strong character, and she was not willing to live a life of mediocrity. She had a vision of a better life, and she was determined to achieve it. She had met PHILIPPA, a woman who was everything she needed. PHILIPPA was a woman of strong character, and she was not willing to live a life of mediocrity. She had a vision of a better life, and she was determined to achieve it.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXV

PHILIPPA'S father came lunging toward her, with clenched fists upraised.

She drew back from him with a scream, which she tried unsuccessfully to suppress. She saw his massive frame quiver from head to foot, as he stopped short before her. Into his eyes came a startled, questioning look which PHILIPPA was quick to interpret as horror of what he had been about to do.

After all the chastising, brutally, of his grown daughter was impossible for him, no matter to what heat she aroused his ready temper. But his manner had been so ferocious, so determined, it nearly frightened poor Mrs. West to death. She collapsed into a convenient chair, and fell to sobbing brokenly. Her world seemed tumbling about her. PHILIPPA had always been respectable. That she should now be mixed up with a married man... it was too much for her mother.

PHILIPPA paid no attention to her, as she sat there with her apron thrown over her head as though with it she would shut out the disgrace that hovered over them. The girl walked to the door. She had nothing more to say to her parents. Let them come to her now, since they had come fit to insult her! Her father did not protest her going. His knees felt weak and he wanted to sit down. He preferred to have PHILIPPA out of the room.

She went to dress. She was going out with ALAN and the subject that chiefly occupied her mind was her appearance. While her parents discussed the situation in the kitchen, she hummed softly over her cosmetic laden dressing table without giving them a further thought.

She was a bit concerned about what she should wear. ALAN had been a trifle grumpy that day; he hadn't said where they would go. As a matter of fact, and PHILIPPA was well aware of it, he hadn't wanted to go anywhere. To begin with, he had been indifferent about the choice of her ring. He told her to pick out what she liked, and PHILIPPA had taken him at his word. Then she suggested that they ought to celebrate the occasion. ALAN acquiesced without interest.

IT WAS a bit of a surprise to her to find ALAN changed when he greeted her at the hotel. She was clearly in the grip of some excitement, which he did not at once reveal. At first she thought he had been drinking, but she had to give up that explanation. But his face was flushed, and his eyes shone with his secret stimulation.

PHILIPPA was a trifle piqued, feeling he had no right to keep exciting news from her. She began speculating. When she came to consideration of Natalie, a dark frown streaked itself across her brow, but she had to force herself to look pleasant. ALAN's eyes were upon her, broodingly, searchingly; appraising her, it seemed to PHILIPPA.

It made her nervous. "Oh, let's dance," she exclaimed pettishly. Slightly ALAN got up from the dinner table, and took her out upon the crowded floor. He had chosen the place. PHILIPPA would have preferred one more intimate, but when she was uncertain of the ground before her, she made it a practice to step lightly; excepting when she lost her temper completely.

ALAN did not hold her tightly, and when she glanced up at him, trying to find the answer for his strangeness in his face, she found him gazing out beyond her, vacantly, as though he looked into great space. Back at their table, she smiled over at him.

"Of course, you do dance divinely, ALAN," she said, "but even so, it's much better when you keep your mind on it. What is the matter with you tonight, anyway?" Here he quivered a bit mentally. The thought that PHILIPPA loved him was always disconcerting to him. He wanted to love her, perhaps he would... well, in time.

Only—and this was why he did not like to think of it—the whole thing bored him. Not completely, but in a way. He hoped to be liked at starting life again, in a sense, but he found himself sinking deeper and deeper into apathy instead.

He decided to honor PHILIPPA with the truth; to treat her with the honesty becoming their relations. If, deep in his heart, there was a small desire for escape back of his decision he did not acknowledge it to himself anymore than he would have let PHILIPPA know about it.

"I've had some very exciting news, PHILIPPA," he said suddenly. She drew in her breath and waited, but her eyes burned expectantly. "I've had a letter from Natalie. She's coming back."

This time PHILIPPA spoke. "From Natalie?" she echoed in dismay. ALAN instantly became defensive. "To the house in Illinois," he explained. "But, ALAN..."

"I can't help it. She has a right to come back." "She has nothing of the kind!" PHILIPPA was thoroughly indignant. "She left you, and she's probably found out they don't want her at home. Surely you aren't going to stand for anything like that!"

"I can't keep her out of her home," ALAN protested. "Her home! Didn't you build it?" "Well, I built it for her and I'm not an Indian giver," ALAN answered sheepishly. His meekness nearly proved to be PHILIPPA's undoing. She misjudged him.

"She hasn't come back," she said furiously. "It's an insult to me!" "Well, now, PHILIPPA," ALAN began placatingly. "If you had any respect for me, you wouldn't permit it," she stormed on. "But, my dear, I'm not living in the house. There has to be some properly settlement, you know. Why shouldn't Natalie have the house if she wants it? I know you wouldn't care to live there. We can build another house..."

"And a much finer one, too," PHILIPPA put in foolishly. ALAN paid no attention to her remark, fortunately for her. Had he weighed her attitude, their engagement, in all likelihood, would have been broken on the spot.

He seemed, and this was no easy matter for PHILIPPA to accept, to be engrossed in Natalie's return. Was he glad of it? The thought, in its unpleasant potentialities, served to calm her a bit.

"She asked me to see the agency that supplies her with servants, and get a maid," he rambled on. At least it seemed to PHILIPPA that he rambled, for it annoyed her to have him talk of Natalie unnecessarily. But they were on the subject now, and she felt she ought to say something that would help to cover her bitterness.

"Why not a cook?" she asked. "I suppose she knows you aren't living in the house? ALAN, she wouldn't expect you to, would she?" Suddenly her voice was vibrantly pleading. ALAN had a feeling of helpless hands held up to him for aid.

"No, no of course not," he answered gruffly. "No doubt she thinks she can manage without a cook." He reached out and picked up the menu card. "What would you like for dessert?"

"Dessert?" PHILIPPA repeated in astonishment. "Why, we haven't had anything but hors d'oeuvres and soup!" "That's right," ALAN said indifferently. "What shall we have?"

"Goose, you've already ordered squabs." "Well, then, let's dance." PHILIPPA was about to say she'd much rather talk, but thought better of it. They danced without conversation, and PHILIPPA guessed that ALAN was not even thinking of her.

She kept telling herself she had nothing to fear. He had asked her to marry him. They were engaged. Nothing could change that. She could hold him. ALAN was too decent for anything else. Better let him alone. Naturally, it upset him to know that Natalie was coming back to occupy their former home.

She didn't quite like the word "upset." It didn't adequately describe his reaction to his wife's announced return. But she preferred not to substitute a word more fitting. Not even in her thoughts would she admit that Natalie had any hold upon ALAN, that could eliminate her, PHILIPPA.

ALAN himself could not have analyzed for her what was in his mind. When he received Natalie's letter, he read it with surprise as his paramount emotion. Then he began, almost imperceptibly and unconsciously, to be thrilled.

It was a short letter, little more than a note, but perfect as Natalie was perfect. Beautifully written on pale tinted paper. She simply said she was returning, and made a few ordinary requests concerning the house. She did not say she was coming back to him. ALAN was puzzled over her complete omission of reference to their estrangement. He had never, in fact, understood the silence she maintained about his having closed the house. Of course, they had corresponded very little since he had moved to town, but he had expected her to take some interest in the matter.

What he did not know, to tell him understanding her attitude, was that Natalie's mother had taken a hand in her daughter's marital affairs about the time the house had been closed.

Natalie hadn't known what to say about it at first. Her heart agreed with what her mother said. She knew she loved ALAN. Being away from him had convinced her he was the greater part of life for her. Everything was flat and dull without him. There was always an ache in her heart.

There were moments when loneliness pressed in so hard upon her that she wanted to cry out for relief. The world, in her father's household, seemed to belong to her sister, Florence, and Florence's ubiquitous boy-friend, Andrew. Until Andrew went away to New York. Then Florence pestered her night and day to be taken there too.

There was no time or place for yearning, except in the dark at night, or under cover of a deviously collected exterior. At times, she thought her heart would break right before her family's eyes, and they wouldn't know a thing about it.

She thought they wouldn't. She didn't know how discerning real mothers are. But she was to learn and be prayerfully grateful for the maternal perspicacity.

They were baking cakes, loaded with fruit and spices, for one of Florence's parties, on a morning when the sun shone brightly through the gaily curtained windows, and turned the kitchen into a place for singing happily.

Mrs. Jayhunter looked at her daughter, and grew misty-eyed. A moment later she slipped into the pantry and wiped the budding tears away, certain that she had put altogether too much nutmeg in the last bowl of batter.

"Mother, what is the matter?" Natalie was looking at her in alarm. Suddenly Mrs. Jayhunter put down the mixing spoon she had just taken up after her trip to the pantry, and faced her daughter with a degree of finality in her mien that completely awed Natalie.

"I want to have a talk with you," she said firmly. "Well," Natalie was hesitant about consenting. "It isn't well," her mother declared stoutly. "Put that pan in the oven and turn the gas down. Then heaven help anyone who interrupts us. I may be making a big mistake, but at least I'm going to do a thorough job."

"Whatever in the world are you talking about?" "I'm going to talk about you and ALAN."

Natalie's hand shook, as she closed the oven door. Her mother saw that it did, but she had made up her mind to be ruthless in the necessary degree. She ordered Natalie to sit in her own "cooking chair," as she called the little rocker by the window, and Natalie did as she was bid. Mrs. Jayhunter wanted more room, so she remained standing, buying her hands in clearing up the table where they had mixed the cakes.

She tore right into Natalie's trouble as if it were some obnoxious thing that had to be slain. And there was so much the air of a crusader about her, with back of it such an apparent love for both her and ALAN, that Natalie was half won. In time she wrote to ALAN, and the day afterward Mrs. Jayhunter dispatched a letter of her own. (To Be Continued)

Southern Grain Co. To Handle Purina

Appointment of Local Dealer Is Announced Today

Appointment of the Southern Grain Co. as the exclusive distributor here for the famous Purina Chow has just been announced by Mr. W. D. Duckett. This, according to Mr. Duckett, is quite a distinction for the firm in view of the fact that the Purina Mills select only the outstanding farms to represent them and their products.

"Before taking the Purina line," Mr. Duckett said, "I became thoroughly convinced that this company, the largest manufacturer of livestock feeds in America, is actually doing more for the farmer than any other company. For thirty-five years the Purina Mills have been manufacturing feeds with one point always in mind: to lower the farmer's production cost by increasing the production of milk, eggs, beef, pork or sheep, and to prepare livestock for market in the shortest possible time.

"That they have done that has been proved consistently on the feed lots of America as well as on the experimental farm of the Purina Company at Illinois. Notwithstanding this, chemists and nutrition experts of the company are constantly at work, trying still further to improve the Purina products. The Purina Research Department at St. Louis is in charge of a former professor at the Mississippi A. & M. College. All new discoveries of experiment stations and the colleges are tested in these laboratories. If they are of advantage in practice, they are applied to the manufacture of Purina Chows. All Chows are sold on the basis of lowering the farmer's cost of production—if they do not, we do not want any more of them around Hempstead county to feed them."

"Right here, I want to emphasize the fact that Purina Chows are not intended to take the place of home-grown grains. Their purpose is to supplement the home grains so as to make a complete, balanced ration, and to make the home grains worth more."

Mr. Duckett states that it will be the aim of the Southern Grain & Produce company to render a real service

1936 MELON FESTIVAL OUT OUR WAY

does," he said, "and ship our melons through Missouri for a better price. The market calls for Hempstead county melons, and pays a premium for them."

Began 15 Years Ago
Mr. Monts' father, A. C. Monts, recalled that 15 years ago Gibson's drug-store imported 100 pounds of high class watermelon seed for local planting. Pessimists said Gibson's never could sell that much seed, and the first year they didn't. But Mr. Monts said that his firm alone sold last year in excess of 1,200 pounds of melon seed, with half a dozen local agencies handling seed.

H. M. Stephens, merchant and banker of Blevins, who is regarded as the father of the radish and cantaloupe industry in northern Hempstead county, told the meeting:

"No merchant or banker ever will prosper unless the farmer prospers—there's where your money comes from. There was a time when we had timber and other sources of revenue, but today prosperity in this section comes entirely from the farm. What cantaloupes are to the Blevins country, watermelons are to Hope. You can't afford to drop the Watermelon Festival and all that it has done for this county."

Some Melon Results

R. H. Tunstall, Hope Route One, one of the growers who made a brief statement of what the melon industry had done for him, said that last year four and a half acres of melons netted him $750. Other growers who also addressed the meeting were: M. E. Tate, Hope Route Three; J. T. Butler, Jr., Hope Route Two; A. B. Turner, Hope Route Two; C. F. Baker; C. E. Boyce, Washington; and J. T. Cumbie. The meeting was also addressed briefly by Lawrence Mitchell, Prescott former county judge of Nevada county who expressed the interest of Hempstead's neighbors in the melon Festival.

The report of the temporary organization committee for the 1936 Festival was made by Carter Johnson and C. C. Spragins. The Chamber of Commerce with the aid of the melon growers voted unanimously to sponsor this year's Festival. The temporary committee was authorized to choose a permanent executive committee, select the executive officer, and make other arrangements at once.

The Festival will be held during the first half of August, possibly on or near Friday, August 8, which immediately follows Farmers' Week at Fayetteville.

Advertising Does Big Job For Ward

Summer Sale Begins at Local Store Saturday, May 17

A merchandising and promotional selling event designed to help business generally in Hope, as well as the trade of one store, is Montgomery Ward & Co.'s Summer Sale, scheduled to begin May 17.

More than 550 retail stores of this company are participating in this push for business. Past experiences have demonstrated that every enterprising merchant in Hope profits by the crowds that nation-wide Ward Sales attract. Several different methods of advertising are being used to reach customers within a radius of 30 or 40 miles of the city, but the greater effort is put forth in newspaper advertising in the Hope Star.

The Ward company estimates that approximately a half million dollars will be expended for advertising in local newspapers over the country to make this double saving sale a success. "This evidence of our confidence in the pulling power of the local newspaper is not a matter of guess work," said A. S. Shaffer, "but our experience of over 1-2 years' retailing convinces us that there is no better medium for reaching Mr. and Mrs. Consumer."

Mrs. A. Rainey and daughter, Mrs. Austin Butler have returned to their home in Palestine, Tex., after an extended visit to Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Christopher.

KEPT IT ON DINNER TABLE

Lady Says Pinch of Black-Draught, After Meals, Relieved Indigestion.

West Asheville, N. C.—"I suffered from indigestion for twelve months," says Mrs. Z. Z. Cole, 118 Montana Avenue, this city. "I could not eat anything that I enjoyed. I had smothering spells caused, I believe, from indigestion. I was also bilious. I tried medicine, but it did not help me."

"One day I was talking to a friend of our family, and he told me how he had been relieved of indigestion by taking Black-Draught. He told me to try it. I started taking a small dose after each meal. I kept it on the dining room table for weeks, and took it faithfully. I soon began to feel better. The indigestion gradually stopped and I gained in health and strength. I have recommended Black-Draught to my friends because it helped me."

"The Black-Draught is a purely vegetable preparation of selected medicinal herbs and roots. Black-Draught is finely powdered, which enables the juices of the stomach to extract its medicinal properties in a natural way. M. L. H."

Employment Is Below Normal

Conditions Over Arkansas Fairly Satisfactory Despite Surpluses

LITTLE ROCK, May 16.—(AP)—Industrial employment conditions for Arkansas during the month of April showed fairly satisfactory although still somewhat below normal, according to the monthly report of the United States Department of Labor, through its employment service, released today.

General labor conditions were shown by the report to have been affected by only small employment decreases and in most cases at least part-time schedules in state industries were in operation. Labor surpluses were still evident throughout the majority of trades.

Part-time schedules were reported from practically all coal mines in the Arkansas area with an accompanying employment reductions registered and labor surpluses evident.

A small decrease was reported in lumber mill employment, with many of the plants operating on part time. Although a majority of textile mills were on full-time schedules a decrease in employment and a surplus of labor existed.

Additional workers were employed during April in stone, glass and clay products plants, and in paper and printing establishments.

Workers were released from the iron and steel industry and in the miscellaneous industry class. Building increased in several localities although there was still a surplus of building trades men at the close of the month.

No Gains in April

Little Rock—There were no mark gains or reductions in employment during April as additions in stone, glass, clay, paper and printing establishments offset decreases in lumber mills and the iron and steel industry. Nearly all factories were running on full-time schedules. A mattress factory and a grain and milling plant worked overtime.

A surplus of both skilled and unskilled labor existed, and building craftsmen exceeded the demand. Farm work advanced.

PORT SMITH, May 16.—(AP)—Labor conditions were on the upturn and all plants were operating, a few on part time schedules which included furniture factories effected about 300 workers. Employment reductions occurred in the iron and steel and textile industries and in several miscellaneous plants. A surplus of industrial and building-trades workers still existed, and farm labor supplies were plentiful.

Surplus Among Unskilled
TEXARKANA, May 16.—(AP)—The majority of plants operated on full time schedules and in the paper and printing establishments and metal products plants additional help was engaged. Chemical plants cottonseed oil mills, and stone, glass and clay products plants curtailed their forces somewhat. Surpluses were most apparent among unskilled workers. Building-trades men were fairly well employed due to the volume of building under way.

PINE BLUFF, May 16.—(AP)—Industrial employment forces were held at a steady level through April, the only fluctuation being a small reduction in miscellaneous industries. Demand and supply of labor was well balanced with only a small surplus of unskilled labor evident. Erection of a $63,000 city library, to start immediately, will offer additional employment to building-trades men. Considerable road work in this vicinity aided a large number of workers.

JONESBORO, May 16.—(AP)—A general surplus of labor existed. All reporting plants were running on full time schedules with the exception of one sawmill, which closed. The major fluctuation in employment occurred in lumber mills. A fairly satisfactory building program was under way and summer highway construction was expected to offer work to a number of laborers.

And still it rains! Let's hope it quits before Saturday, but if it doesn't, don't let a little rain keep you from the Kiddies club on Saturday. We've got a wonderful picture for you. It's a western, all in colors, and it's plenty good. There are no less than seven villains in it. Seven bold, bad men. And there are seven beautiful girls that the bold, bad men pursue, and the hero fights them all off on his horse. There's lots of singing and dancing. Little Armda, a Mexican girl, dances and sings beautifully. And there are two singing comedians that will make you laugh until your sides ache.

"Under A Texas Moon" Saenger Theatre Today

Frank Fay, playing the leading role of Don Carlos in "Under a Texas Moon," the Warner Bros. and Vitaphone first 100 per cent talking, singing, outdoor picture in technicolor, which comes to the Saenger theatre today and Saturday, has some of the most famous villains of the screen to aid him.

Noah Beery, is a somewhat noisy but altogether agreeable rascal; Fred Kohler does another type of rascal; Tully Marshall adds a distasteful if amusing characterization to speed the story. Charles Sellen, who is sly and devilish, gets what is due him early in the story. George Stone, George Cooper, Jack Curtis, and Sam Appel are also in the list of villainous characters with which Don Carlos has to deal. A number of other bit players, selected for their hard faces make the easy-going rather rough-going for the romantic Mexican.

But it is the sentiment to whom Don Carlos makes violent love that makes the story colorful. Among them are Raquel Torres, Myrna Loy, Armida, Mona Maris and Betty Boyd, Michael Curtiz directed.
